May 30th, 2020 - in 1967 when Diane Arbus, Lee Friedlander and Garry Winogrand were still relatively unknown, curator John Szarkowski featured their work in the groundbreaking exhibition New Documents at the Museum of Modern Art. Although few could have predicted it at the time, it would become one of the most influential exhibitions of photography in the 20th century, signaling a watershed moment in the "Garry Winogrand" era.

*May 21st, 2020 - In 1967, his work was included in the influential New Documents show at MoMA in New York, with Diane Arbus and Lee Friedlander, curated by John Szarkowski. 20 years later, his photographs of the Bronx Zoo and the Coney Island Aquarium made up his first book, The Animals (1969), which observes the connections between humans and animals.*

May 18th, 2020 - Arbus, despite being exhibited alongside Winogrand and Lee Friedlander in the landmark New Documents show at MoMA in 1967, saw little financial gain from the exposure; she only sold a few.

'New Documents' fifty years later at MoMA: art zealous

May 29th, 2020 - In celebration of this anniversary, the museum is publishing Arbus, Friedlander, Winogrand: New Documents 1967, featuring new essays by curator Sarah Meister and critic Max Kozloff, and an abundance of previously unpublished archival material.

April 20th, 2020 - New Documents was an influential documentary photography exhibition at the Museum of Modern Art in New York in 1967, curated by John Szarkowski. It presented photographs by Diane Arbus, Lee Friedlander, and Garry Winogrand and is said to have represented a shift in emphasis and identified a new direction in photography: pictures that seemed to have a casual, snapshot-like look and subject matter.
